COURSE DESCRIPTION: Throughout its history, anthropology has been committed to and active in maintaining the rights of indigenous peoples against the destructive global forces of nation-state power, racist ideologies, assimilation, and industrial resource appropriation. To develop an informed, up-to-date, and critical understanding of these issues, the course will offer an overview of the contemporary state of indigenous peoples and then guide students in pursuing on-line research of Internet sites established by indigenous peoples themselves, anthropological groups, international human rights organizations, world news services, national governments, and the United Nations.

COURSE OBJECTIVES:

1. The course critically examines the cultural and political meanings of concepts used to talk about human rights, especially considering the universalist versus relativist debate.

2. Equally important, discrimination, prejudice, genocide, coercive assimilation, and other patterns of domination will be placed in their cultural and global contexts of understanding.

3. The contradiction between globalization and local ethnic identity is thus examined at a broader level of analysis.

4. Both the unique and general historical and social conditions of the exploitation, destruction, disenfranchisement, and underdevelopment of Fourth World peoples by globalization processes of colonialism and industrialization.

5. A survey of indigenous peoples in crisis throughout the world will be offered. Areas will include North America, Central America, South America, Asia, Europe, and Oceania.

6. The concept of "human rights" will be discussed at an inter-cultural level of analysis in order to move toward a culturally contextualized, pluralistic definition.

7. Also to be critically examined are various strategies available to indigenous peoples for organization, political action, and legal mechanisms for resisting, reversing, and attenuating the destructive effects of globalization.

FINAL PRESENTATION/PROJECT ASSIGNMENT

In a presentation of 15-20 minutes and essay of 12-14 pages, either (A) analyze a contemporary human rights issue faced by indigenous peoples globally; (B) investigate the main issue(s) faced by and strategies for solving them used by a particular indigenous peoples; (C) examine the configuration of indigenous rights issues in one nation-state context (e.g., Ecuador, Burma, China, etc.); or (D) analyze the structure and progress of a major global NGO involved in indigenous rights (e.g., UN, AI, OAS, etc.). Evidence is to be collected from published sources and accepted internet sites. At least ten substantive sources are required. Some questions to consider: What forces or powers (e.g., nation-state, dominant group, or corporation) or organizations are presently involved in this issue? What concepts or theoretical approaches from readings in the course are relevant for understanding the situation? How is the issue of identity involved? How are the human rights issues defined and articulated? What is the historical background to the issues? What strategies have been used by the organization or indigenous group to address them? What contradictions or conflicting interests are entailed? What can an anthropological perspective add to understandings of the problem? What strategies have been or will be most effective or least effective in resolving these? Why?

All students must confer with the professor on a topic before March 30. An emailed abstract and revised copy, if needed. Rough drafts can be submitted for review until May 7.

The final product is due at 10:00 p.m. on May 11th.

Include a list of sites (a webliography) and bibliography you have used in this report.
